Additional Information for Owners of Solid Polypropylene Pool Covers

Water relief is built into this cover by stitching panels together, thereby creating many tiny water vents. As water accumulates on cover, the material, which is lighter than water, rises slowly to the surface. Therefore, when the cover is dry and first installed on the pool, it is quite common for a few inches of water to seep through these "water vents." This process is normal and will soon equalize, resulting in a cover that requires much less pumping or siphoning than other covers.
